I grew up in San Antonio and went to St. Mary's University. After graduating from Texas A&M University School of Law and clerking at the 14th Court of Appeals, I have practiced civil defense litigation since returning to San Antonio in 2016. I am running for re-election as a Director because I believe the organization is an invaluable resource for young lawyers and a vital part of the legal community at large. Although SAYLA faced endless challenges and interruptions during my first term, I learned a great deal from my fellow board members about adapting to change, keeping focus on our membership and its needs, and staying positive in hard times. I would be honored to continue serving as a Director and contributing to SAYLA's mission to support and bring together young lawyers across our community.
